WORKING PAPERS	Labor Market Consequences of Restatements for Corporate Accountants (Job Market Paper) <ul style="list-style-type: none"><li>• Summary: I use LinkedIn to identify a comprehensive sample of 24,673 individual employees who work for firms that restated their financial statements between 2004 and 2014. This study provides the first large-sample evidence of labor market outcomes of restatements for corporate accountants.</li></ul> Traditional Media, Twitter, and Business Scandals (with John Jiang) <ul style="list-style-type: none"><li>• Summary: With the rise of social media, we evaluate the relative importance of traditional media and social media in uncovering and disseminating news on firm misbehaviors. We also examine whether social media plays a similar monitoring role as traditional media.</li></ul> Individual Lawyers, the SEC Revolving Door, and Comment Letters (with Samuel Tan) <ul style="list-style-type: none"><li>• Summary: Using LinkedIn and other public sources, we assemble a comprehensive dataset on the individual characteristics (e.g., SEC-affiliation, educational background, gender) of lawyers. We examine the impact of SEC-affiliated lawyers on the SEC comment letter process and shed light on the concern that former SEC employees may continue to influence the agency even after they leave.</li></ul>
WORK IN PROGRESS	Qualitative Information of Credit Rating Action Reports (with John Jiang) <ul style="list-style-type: none"><li>• Summary: After the 2008 financial crisis, the SEC starts to regulate the format and content of credit rating action reports. Using the topic modeling approach, we quantify the usage of various rating factors in credit rating action reports and examine how capital market incorporates the qualitative information in rating action reports.</li></ul>
